The average automotive hide is between 45-55 sq. ft. In computing the number of hides required to do a good sized job, the following rule of thumb can be applied: 1 yd. (54" wide) equals 18 sq. ft. Thus, the average hide is the same as $2^{1/2}$ lineal yards.

The butt (widest area of the hide) has the tightest fiber and the best long term flexibility. This area should be used for cushion tops, which get the most usage.

The shoulder and belly of the hide can then be used on the outside back and arms (areas subject to considerably less stress).

When figuring a leather job, the estimate of trimmers cost is equivalent to approximately $100 per lineal yard, plus labor (plus your mark-up).

Windlace

Windlace is the cording that is used around the perimeter of the doors of automobiles. The material is sewn around 3/8" sponge cord with cardboard and has a flange of approximately 1/2".

How much Windlace do you need? 5 Yards for Most 2 Door Hardtopsps 7 Yards for Most 2 Door Sedans 14 Yards for Most 4 Door Vehicles
